Communication Rights

The Americans with Disabilities Act ensures people with disabilities have certain rights when communicating with a member of law enforcement

COMMUNICATION METHODS:

Law enforcement should give communication preference to an individual who is deaf or hard of hearing whenever possible.

For routine interactions such as traffic stops: Accepted communication methods may include, gestures, written notes, or printed materials.

For complex interaction such as: extended field communications or transporting an individual for questioning or arrest:

1. An individual who is deaf or hard of hearing has the right to a qualified Sign Language interpreter at no cost, with legal interpreting training who can explain constitutional rights.

2. An individual who is deaf or hard of hearing has the right to refuse to answer questions and to have a lawyer present before and during any questioning.

3. An individual who is deaf or hard of hearing may request a Stenographer or Communication Access Real-time Translation (CART) for captioning conversations.

4. An individual who is deaf or hard of hearing may request a Videophone, Internet Service, a Computer, a Captel Telephone, or a Cell Phone for making a phone call or texting.

Individuals who are deaf or hard of hearing should continue to dial 911 for reporting police, fire, and medical emergencies. 911 is TTY and text compatible.
